

Recognition for superb printing...

Copresco Shares Prestigious Awards With Clients

Over the past two years Copresco has picked up major communications industry recognition for printing excellence. In keeping with our tradition of sharing our industry recognition, we've presented commemorative plaques to our clients.

Gold Ink Awards

ProForm Technologies, Inc. won Gold Ink's Gold and Bronze awards in the final year of this distinguished print competition.

For many years, the Gold Ink program, sponsored by Printing Impressions magazine, was considered to be the graphic industry's most prestigious print competition.

Graphics Excellence

ProForm, an Illinois printing broker, also received Best of Division and Graphics Excellence Awards from the Great Lakes Graphics Association (GLGA).

The awards recognize high quality and craftsmanship in design, creation and full color printing.

More GLGA Winners

The Gutenberg Best of Category Award was given to The Awakenings Review, a literary journal of fiction, poetry, art and essays by persons living with mental illness.

Innovative Graphics won a GLGA Best of Division for an MBC Annual Report in the Business and Annual Reports Category.

A training cookbook by Kjellberg Inc. picked up a Certificate of Merit Award.

Highest Standards

"These awards exemplify the highest standards in our industry and show the capabilities of our digital printing services," says Copresco President Steve Johnson.

Lynn Buck Honored

Copresco Production Manager Lynn Buck has been honored as the runner-up for the Women In Print Excellence Award.

The Award recognizes the contributions of Midwest women in print and the graphic arts.

Lynn joined Copresco in 1997 as a production coordinator and was promoted to production manager in 2006.

She is responsible for our shop floor and the production of millions of pages of publications, books and manuals.

Her duties include the supervision of all facets of book manufacturing,

Two pirates met after a long separation. “My, Angus, what happened to you?” “I guess you’re talking about my peg leg. I was out on the rigging one day and fell into the water. Before I could get back aboard, a shark got me, and now I’ve got the peg.” “Terrible! And what about your arm?” “You mean the hook? I got into a fight with a young swashbuckler one night. I got him, but he got my arm.” “Wow! And your eye?” “You mean the patch? Well, I got an eyelash in my eye.”

“Seriously?” the friend laughed. “A tough guy like you? I can understand you losing a leg to a shark and losing an arm to a young swordfighter, but how did a little eyelash cost you an eye?” “Easy,” the pirate said, “if it’s your first day with a hook.”

I got good news and bad news from my son’s teacher. The good news is my kid is full of creative ideas. The bad news is they’re all in spelling.

At the grocery store, a woman noticed a man pushing a cart with a screaming baby. The man kept repeating softly, “Don’t scream, Albert. Don’t yell, Albert.”

Keep calm, Albert. Hang on, buddy...” “Excuse me sir,” the woman said, “you certainly are to be commended for so patiently calming little Albert.” “Lady,” the man explained, “I’m Albert.”

“So, my boy,” growled old Bigelow, “you want to become my son-in-law.” “Well, not exactly,” the boy admitted, “but I want to marry your daughter, and I guess there’s no other way.”

When billionaire Howard Hughes died, a reporter asked the private nurse what Mr. Hughes left behind. She replied, “Everything, I think.”

I threw a New Year’s Eve party last year, and I’ll never forget the stroke of midnight. That’s when I got the bill.

Life really is short. I saw a criminal who had been sentenced to life get out after only ten years.

“Well, well,” the doctor told his patient. “It seems that your weight is perfect. It just happens that you are seven feet too short.”
